

I want to build a dashboard where when a user enters a YouTuber—which is, for example, MrBeast—name, and then the profile shows up in the app. Somehow we scrape it; think of the solutions on how we can scrape it.

Once we get the YouTuber's profile, we can click on track, and then a list of short-form videos get scraped or get tracked from the YouTuber's channel into our database. So once this has come, I will have a video feed where I can view all the short-form videos which the YouTuber has posted. I can filter out the outliers based on views, based on likes, all the metrics.

And it's beautifully presented—maybe we can even show the thumbnail of the Short if possible to improve the UI. And then when a user clicks on that particular thumbnail, this redirects to YouTube. So we are not embedding videos; we are just scraping and then putting it into our dashboard.

So make sure this can happen at scale because we need to do this for multiple other creators as well. So this is the basic idea. Think of the whole workflow and architecture which needs to be used, and I want to make an MVP as soon as possible. So guide me with that."

Key Requirements Summary

User Input: Search by YouTuber name.

Action: "Track" a profile to trigger data collection.

Content Focus: Short-form videos (YouTube Shorts).

Features:

Data scraping/API integration for metrics (views, likes).

Filtering system for "outliers."

UI Gallery with thumbnails.

External redirection to YouTube (no internal embedding).

Goal: Scalable architecture for an MVP.
